

Implementing Intergenerational Practice

Intergenerational Practice can take many forms, linking together a range of processes that build positive relationships between generations, bringing mutual benefits to all involved. One consequence of this can be improved community cohesion but, as later case studies show, the impact may be much wider. It is useful to see its local implementation as a continuum that tracks the levels of contact with and between participating generations.

Adapted with permission from Kaplan, M, Toward an intergenerational way of life, Journal of Family & Consumer Sciences, 96 (2), 5-9, 2004.