Recognising when a website is secure

Before you enter any details into a web page (especially payment details) you should check that the web page is secured. In Safari you can check this by looking at the address/search bar at the top of the page. If the Page is secure you will see a padlock before the address

If the page is not, it will show “Not Secure”

Caution should still be used with secure pages, the padlock means no one can intercept the data as you send it to the website, the website will still have access to the data you send so it is important you trust the website.

Closing or killing a running app

If an app is not working properly or as you would expect it to, you can quit it and then try to reopen it. Killing and reopening the app may resolve the problem. It's worthwhile noting here that there is no reason to quit an app as iOS is built in such a way that it can happily manage running multiple apps at once. Killing any running apps will not save you battery power for example.

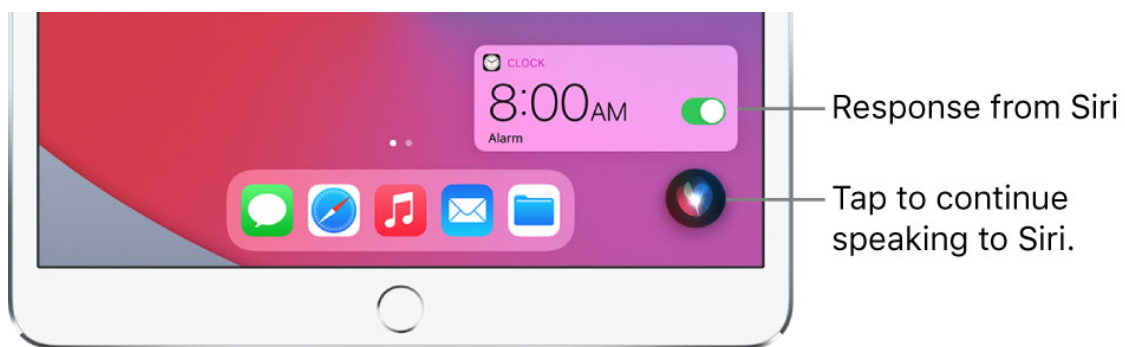

Double click the home button to bring up the App switcher, alternatively swipe up from the bottom edge and pause in the middle of the screen, swipe up on the app to close.

Press the home button or swipe up from the bottom edge to return to the home screen. You can now relaunch the app by tapping on it on the home screen.
