Scotland Private Sector

As an early-years nursery manager, you understand the importance of providing a holistic and enriching experience for the children in your care. Intergenerational practice can enhance this experience by fostering connections between generations and promoting diversity and inclusion.

At Generations Working Together, we believe in the power of intergenerational work to create a better future for all. Join us today as a member and take advantage of all that we have to offer. Access resources, connect with like-minded early-years professionals, and benefit from our detailed online training programme. Together, let's create a brighter future for all generations through intergenerational work.

Paula
Manager of a Small Nursery
Scotland

Paula, 45, is the manager of a small nursery (45 places) employing ten staff (a mixture of full and part time). She and her colleagues watched the TV programme Old People's Home for 4 Year Olds (on Channel 4), and they are now thinking about developing an intergenerational partnership in the community with a local care home.

Paula wants to learn more about intergenerational work and is keen to access training for herself and her staff team. She is looking for training online as there are no courses in intergenerational practice available in her local area. She also wants to know where to go to read about early years intergenerational work and to meet other practitioners on the same wavelength. For their own development, Paula and colleagues are potentially interested in a higher-level qualification (Generations Working Together's online International Certificate in Intergenerational Practice).
