As a teacher, whether in a primary or secondary school, you understand the importance of creating inclusive and stimulating classrooms for your students.

With a membership to Generations Working Together, you'll have access to a wide range of resources and opportunities to advance intergenerational practice in your teaching. Our members receive regular updates on the latest research and best practices in the field, as well as invitations to exclusive events and networking opportunities. With our community of like-minded individuals, we can help you to connect with other educators who share your passion for intergenerational practice and can support you in exploring intergenerational partnership opportunities. Join now and make a real difference in your students' lives, the intergenerational way.

Peter
Teacher
England

Peter has just turned 50 and has now been teaching for 25 years. He became head teacher of a large high school two years ago.

His background is in science education. In his last months in the classroom, he began experimenting with intergenerational practice as a way to promote STEM * education and engagement among his students.

He recognises and values the skills and contribution of older people to the community where he lives and works.

While his time is limited, Peter has begun researching best practice and resources in intergenerational practice in education, with a plan to introduce this to his staff team. He is also on the lookout for flexible, reasonably priced professional development opportunities for his staff.

* STEM - approach to learning and development that integrates the areas of science, technology, engineering and mathematics.

Trust College, a Further Education College in England, has a big community development department. Each year, for their research, a large number of their students seek to partner with organisations in the region.

Working in an academic setting, it makes sense for the department to approach Generations Working Together to discuss a customised membership as they want to enable their PhD students, as well as their staff, to have full access to GWT's website and, in particular, the research in the resources library.

They are attracted by the Research Network which will allow them to keep abreast of new research and, likewise, their PhD researchers also allowing them to make links with other PhD students. They also see the international conference as a real opportunity for networking.
